

ABSTRACT

The invention concerns the field of biology and cell cycle regulation. More particularly, the invention concerns novel polypeptides capable of interacting specifically with an oncogenic form of the p53 protein.